

Beta Kappa (Chico State) Pitches in for Patrick Ranch Project

It's always nice to have muscle on moving day.

When it was time to move all the packed boxes from the red barn at the Patrick Ranch Museum, the folks who run the place knew who to call — members of Alpha Gamma Rho's Beta Kappa Chapter at Chico State University.

Members of Beta Kappa were on the job recently at the ranch, on the Midway between Chico and Durham.

Shar Plowman, public relations coordinator for the museum, said the Fraternity helps out frequently when there are odd jobs or heavy lifting. It works out, because the group gets to use facilities for their dances.

This week, everything needs to be moved from the red barn so electrical wiring can be improved. A portable unit will temporarily store the boxes and furniture.

Plowman said the Patrick Ranch could still use some sponsors to finish the inside of the building, and now would be a great time because the building is all clear.

People who have visited recently recall the interior of the barn had display cases, and a country store. Soon, the plan is to display artifacts in the building, which is near the gravel parking lot.

tor at the ranch, said the work on the barn will take at least two months.

"We are hoping to get it done for the threshing bee in the beginning of June," she said.

The building was built by Chico State University construction students during a "building blitz," she said.
